SELECTIONS

REPORTED HIM TO SHERMAN.

It Was Rather Late, but the Union General Was Pleased.

When the national convention of lawyers met in the west some years ago, Mr. du Bignon was sent to represent Georgia, his native state. Being one of the rising young men of his region, he was also invited to respond to the toast, "The Young Manhood of the South," at the large banquet given.

The young lawyer prepared his reply with care, feeling he had done his best, which is all the bar could expect of him. His toast was the tenth in the line, and the toastmaster had pronounced in distinct tones the title of the toast and added that Mr. Fleming du Bignon of Georgia would reply.

The lawyer rose slowly to his feet, glancing as he did so down the long double line of expectant, polite, upturned faces smiling at him, encouraging him to proceed.

His "piece" was all clearly in mind. He remembered every planned gesture, every turn and point he proposed to make.

"Gentlemen of the bar," he began, "I—"

"General Sherman," delightedly broke in the toastmaster, and "Sherman! Sherman!" was echoed all down the table, which saw dozens of men stand to their feet to greet the great soldier lawyer as he entered the room.

General Sherman had promised to attend this convention, but had been detained by other engagements until this late hour, and his advent was hailed with a burst of welcome as he advanced down to his vacant chair. Every one was shaking hands with him, creating quite a hubbub.

When it finally subsided, the toastmaster turned again to the young Georgian and said:

"Will Mr. du Bignon now proceed with the toast, 'The Young Manhood of the South?'"

The Georgian sat for an instant dazed. He was young, and the excitement breaking into his speech had floored him.

What was he going to do? What was he going to say? Every line of his prepared speech had left him. Every bit of his plan of thought had deserted him. To stand there a confirmed dillard, to be unable to respond to the toast that involved all his patriotism, when that speech was intended to show the northerners just what the southerners could do and be! It was humiliating. It was agonizing.

All this, however, did not occupy the space of time it takes to tell it. It flashed through his brain like lightning, and even during the latter part of these thoughts he was rising mechanically to his feet.

He stood still a second and saw General Sherman's face looking at him with interest. The silence was appalling. He felt that every one was thinking: "Poor fellow. He doesn't know what to say."

In a quiet tone, in which, however, he felt a quiver, he commenced:

"Gentlemen, I am confounded! The advent of so noted a warrior as General Sherman has made me forget every word of my speech"—the men all looked anxious and interested—"but I think you can scarcely wonder at my confusion. Georgians are so used to the fact of General Sherman following them that it is enough to simply paralyze any one of them to be asked to follow the general." There was a pause for an instant over the young fellow's audacity, and then the room rang with appreciative applause of his excellent wit.

Men leaned over their plates and immediately fixed themselves into attitudes of interest. They at once perceived that at least an original young chieftain was going to speak.

Mr. du Bignon felt the personal magnetism he had excited reflect on himself and continued with more assurance.

He said that he would tell a story about the young manhood of the south, the very young manhood, including his first impressions of General Sherman.

The time was the civil war, the place Milledgeville, Ga. "I was only a little shaver," he started, "staying at home taking care of my mother and younger brother. All the men had gone to the war. The cry started early in the morning, 'Sherman is coming.' It increased from a whisper to a frightened shout. The old negroes who were at home left the field and gathered in their cabins, exactly as if it had been said, 'The judgment day is coming.' People stood irresolute in the street, not knowing what to do or whether it was best to go anywhere.

"And later on he came. Soldiers and horses, they began to fill the town and the people's houses, and fear was the prevailing element.

"I insisted that my Shetland pony and my brother's pet rooster must be saved. My mother equally insisted that I was to stay in the house, for if not the soldiers would carry me away. I was made a prisoner, but owned a window, and when I saw one of the soldiers go under our house and catch the rooster and wring its neck I was certain that my pony would go next. So, jumping out of the window, I ran to the soldier, and doubling up my fist cried, 'Dog-gone you, you old Yankee, if you take that pony I'll report you to General Sherman!'"

He stopped for an instant and then continued courteously, "General, he did take my pony, and this is my first opportunity to report to you."

A RACE FOR A WIFE.

"Old man Smith, that's Mollie's father, didn't like me near as well as he did Jim, but seen that Mollie preferred me I wasn't carin much about her dad's opinion. I wasn't no use for us to try to get applied in Columbia, for everybody knew that her father had ordered her not to be seen with me, so the only thing for us to do was to watch our chance and go off on the quiet to some place along the line. I thought it over for several days and got the whole thing in shape. I told Mollie to come down to the roundhouse about 7 o'clock one night, and I would take her a little ride on my engine. She afraid? Well, I guess you don't know her. Why, she had run the machine herself many a time.

"I had given the hint to Jack, my fireman, and he was on hand when I backed out on the main track, leavin Jim's engine in the roundhouse. Mollie was waitin, and she jumped on the tank like an engineer's sweetheart, ought to do. Just as we were pullin out Jim came around the corner. His eyes opened, I tell you.

"Where you goin, Bill?" he shouted.

"Just out for a little ride," I remarked coolly, puttin Mollie on the box in front of me so I had to put my arms around her to reach the levers. I saw Jim gasp and start on a run toward Mollie's house, where he knew her father was.

"In two minutes we were spinnin, in three hummin, and in five minutes we were tearin through the valley like a cyclone. It was a pitch dark night, and not a thing could be seen ahead.

"Here they come," yelled Jack before we had gone ten miles.

"Lookin back we saw a shower of sparks just visible above the tree tops. We concluded at once that was Jim and Mollie's dad, and that we would have to do some pretty tall travellin to avoid capture. Mind you, Jim carried a gun. The engines were pretty well matched, but of course I was somewhat nervous. Just ahead was a heavy grade five miles long, and I knew it would be a tough pull to get over it, but once on the other side of the hill our chances for gettin away would be good.

"Do your best, Jack, to keep up steam," I called across to the fireman.

"Mollie was restin in my arms as quietly as if we had been sittin on the hair-cloth sofa in her parlor, her lips half open and the wind blowin her hair all over my face. Mighty sweet it seemed, too, but I hadn't much time to think about such things then.

"All of a sudden we heard a whistle, and it sounded right behind us. I jumped with dismay and looked back. There was Jim less than half a mile away, coming in like a house on fire. I saw her father's eyes fall on Jack, whose wood was gettin low, and who had rolled a barrel out from the back part of the tank and was tryin to bust the head in. She slid out of my arms, and holdin on to the levers got down beside the fireman. The first I knew of it was when I saw her fall in out big fat hams from the barrel and passin them to Jack, who was feedin the furnace with 'em. I didn't stop to ask any questions. 'Bully for you, Jack!' I yelled as the steam gauge jumped up again.

"Well, that did the business. We reached the top of the grade without Jim gainin another inch, and then we began to slide downward. Great Jupiter, how we did drop down that hill! The noise was terrific, and the old machine rocked like a cradle. Lookin back, I saw Mollie standin on the tank holdin on by the brake, her dress flutterin, her hair blowin and her eyes shinin like stars. I'll never forget that sight.

"I knew that as soon as Jim reached the top of the hill he'd be after us Hockey split, and I began to fear we couldn't make the rifle this time, but all at once a thought struck me
